ABOUT JAMEY

Jamey started his career as a DBA for a small company in 2000. In 2004, he became interested in Middleware/Java technology and got a job at Disney as a Programmer Analyst on the Middleware Operations team. After a brief leave in 2007, Jamey returned to the same team in 2009 as team lead and was named Manager in 2010.

In his role as manager, Jamey led his team through several transformations and later became Sr. Manager with multiple managers reporting to him. By this time, Jamey had been on the team over a decade and was looking to do something different. That's when he took an opportunity to manage a development team, which was his first foray into the world of Agile and Scrum methodology. He managed that development team for a year and then moved to the Mobile development team to manage a slice of functionality in Disney's "My Disney Experience" iOS & Android apps, where he currently remains today.

WHAT OTHERS HAVE TO SAY

"In addition to being exceptionally well versed in Websphere, IIS/.NET and a host of other technologies, Jamey has an aptitude for aligning technical designs to real business requirements. There are not too many folks out there who share Jamey's ability to balance a level of technical excellence and concepts like time to market or time to repair. He's a very high-energy, self motivated person and he's comfortable both leading and participating in teams. No job seems too big or too small for him to tackle, and he quickly gained the respect and friendship of his peers here at HMM." - Glen Bischoff
