ABOUT GINGA

Ginga believes teams thrive and achieve greater heights when their environment is rooted in safety, trust and valuing people as human beings. The whole person - spirit, heart, body and mind - is invited to work. One of her gifts is facilitating groups to mine the gems of wisdom and ideas to create a shared vision for their preferred future and a map to get them.

Her career in Information Technology has spanned roles in systems development and operations as well as organizational development and technical leadership in the following industries: oil and energy, pharmaceutical, telecom and local government. After 15 years with corporate employers including Glaxo Wellcome and Nortel Networks, she became an independent consultant providing a variety of services, including service management, program and project management, computer validation/compliance consulting, software gap analysis, implementation planning, process design, and organizational design and strategy. She enjoyed a hiatus from the corporate world during the summers from 2006-2008 as the resident massage therapist and yoga instructor for a guest ranch and outfitters on the edge of the Coeur d'Alene National Forest in the Idaho Panhandle.

WHAT OTHERS HAVE TO SAY

"Ginga and I worked together on several initiatives. The largest of these was a project that she led for GSK to migrate the Docent 6.5 learning management system. There were so many variables and she really did a masterful job coordinating all of the diverse functions, and keeping the project on track. Ginga has a unique ability to see the big picture and communicate it effectively. I would strongly recommend Ginga for managing complex technology implementations and system integration efforts, and I would welcome the opportunity to work with her again in the future."
